ASSESSING THE HOMELAND SECURITY THREAT: LONG-TERM IMPLICATIONS FOR KENTUCKY

SPEAKERS' BIOGRAPHIES

Bill Brundage has been tasked by Governor Paul Patton with developing and coordinating the Commonwealth of Kentucky's New Economy Initiative, which will define Kentucky's national and international economic position for the 21st century. A native of upstate New York, Bill Brundage has spent much of his professional life in the south and mid-west. He received his PhD in Microbiology in 1967 from Louisiana State University after a tour of duty as a Captain in the U.S. Army Medical Service Corps in Vietnam. He began his academic career as an assistant professor at LSU followed by 13 years at the University of Southern Mississippi where he ultimately became the Director of Research and Sponsored Programs. In 1982 he became President of the Southern Center for Research and Innovation, a not for profit organization that coordinated advanced technology research with field applications in the local economy. He developed satellite technology for emergency medical service systems that was utilized by government and media after the Mexico earthquake and the eruption of Mt. St. Helens. In 1987, Brundage became the first president of the Kansas Technology Enterprise Corporation (KTEC). Under his leadership the KTEC became one of the premier technology economic development organizations in the nation. From 1993 to 1997 Brundage served as president and chief executive officer of the Enterprise Florida Technology Development Board. In 1997 he founded his own consulting firm, American Innovation, Inc. and contracted with the Kansas City Area Development Council (KCADC) to establish the SmartTec Initiative, a technology economic development component created for the purpose of increasing the number of high growth potential technology-based firms in the greater Kansas City metropolitan area. He also assisted in developing a strategic plan that recommended the creation of the Kansas City Area Life Sciences Institute. He then took on the role of Interim Executive Director of the Kansas City Area Life Sciences Institute. The next step was Kentucky, which the avid golfer says will be his last job. Under his leadership, and backed by the Governor and the Cabinet for Economic Development, no part of the state is being left out of the march toward the high-tech future. Brundage feels that the Commonwealth of Kentucky can truly be an architect of its future in the new knowledge-based economy. His wife, Glenda, is a former mezzo-soprano with the Metropolitan Opera National Company and a successful real estate agent. They have two children, a daughter, Leslie, and a son, Greg, and one granddaughter, Lilly. Bill enjoys golfing, football, college basketball, and opera.

Ron Carson has been a senior fellow at the Council on Postsecondary Education since 1999. In that role he works on budget, legislative, and knowledge-based economy issues. Prior to joining the Council staff, he worked 27 years in the state budget office serving as deputy state budget director for Governors Patton, Jones, Wilkinson, Collins, and Brown and as a budget analyst during the administrations of Governors Carroll and Ford. He is a past president of the Kentucky chapter of the American Society for Public Administration, a life member of the National Association of State Budget Officers, and a past chair of the LTPRC Board of Directors. He has participated in Leadership Kentucky and the Program for Senior Executives in State and Local Government at Harvard University's JFK School. He served in the U.S. Navy for three years as a communications officer aboard an aircraft carrier. He holds degrees from Centre College, the University of Kentucky, and the University of Southern California. Raised in Louisville and Jefferson County, he and his wife, Paula Moore, live on a farm in Franklin County.

Dr. Nancy Cox became Associate Dean for Research, College of Agriculture and Associate Director, Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station in October, 2001. She holds a PhD in Physiology from North Carolina State University (1982) and a MS in Physiology from the University of Georgia (1977). She received a B.A. from Furman University in 1975. She was a faculty member in Animal Physiology in the Department of Animal Science at Mississippi State University from 1982 through 1997, and she held joint appointments in the Department of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology and the College of Veterinary Medicine. She conducted research on control of reproduction in swine and developed a method to enhance reproductive performance using metabolic regulators. She also studied the effects of diabetes on the reproductive system in female mammals. In 1997 Dr. Cox became an administrator for the Mississippi Agricultural Experiment Station, serving in assistant and associate director positions until 2001. She was responsible for oversight of agricultural research accountability, strategic planning and management of intellectual property and licensing developed by agricultural scientists. She served as chair of the committee that wrote a successful proposal for a $10 million contract from NASA to create the Mississippi State University Remote Sensing Technologies Center. She also was chair of the committee to plan a biotechnology institute at Mississippi State University, involving the campus community and external consultants. She also served as co-chair of the Mississippi Legislature Joint Swine Environmental Task Force on the Environment during 1997 and 1998; this task force made recommendations concerning impacts of animal agriculture on the environment. At the University of Kentucky Dr. Cox is involved in evaluation of research faculty, research accountability, and new research initiatives. During 2001 she served as coordinator of the in-house research program on mare reproductive loss syndrome, which involved studies linking extensive Kentucky foal losses in 2001 and 2002 with eastern tent caterpillars. She is also responsible for oversight of the statewide system of experiment station research. In 2001 she became coordinator of the Forage-Animal Production Research Unit, a collaboration between the USDA Agricultural Research Service (USDA-ARS) and the UK College of Agriculture. This project involves establishment of a USDA-ARS unit in Lexington. She is incoming chair of the national-level Science and Technology Committee for the Experiment Station Committee on Policy.

Bill Goodman began hosting Kentucky Tonight on the Kentucky Education Network (KET) in September of 1996. Prior to joining KET, Mr. Goodman ran a business in Glasgow, Kentucky. He has had temporary international health assignments in Panama and Guam and student assignments in Guatemala and Bolivia.

Sylvia L. Lovely came to the Kentucky League of Cities, a membership organization of over 350 cities across the commonwealth, in 1988 as staff attorney. In 1990, she was appointed executive director and CEO, a position which requires overseeing a staff of 70 professionals headquartered in Lexington whom work to provide services vital to city government, including bond, investment and insurance pooling; advocacy at the state and federal levels; legal assistance; an annual convention; a monthly publication, KLC Direct; training and educational seminars; and information technology services. She works closely with the KLC President and Board of Directors to carry out the mission of the League, develops and oversees the KLC legislative program and lobbying efforts, and serves on numerous statewide boards and commissions including the Kentucky Habitat for Humanity Board, the Governor's Commission on Family Farms and Southern Growth Policy Board. Her efforts also extend nationally through her involvement with the National League of Cities (NLC), where she is extremely active in promoting the viability of cities. In addition to her current responsibilities as executive director, she also serves as president of the NewCities Foundation, a newly formed educational foundation of the League, and as publisher of City magazine, a quarterly community issues publication that has statewide distribution. Sylvia has been entrenched in building citizenship and encouraging civic engagement. She does so by telling the stories of Kentucky cities, their leaders, and their successes. The story telling is captured via a monthly TV show titled "City Voice." The topics relayed by the television program are supplemented by her columns, speeches, and personal appearances. Ms. Lovely was one of twelve women to be named to the 2001 Kentucky Women of Influence, an award that recognizes women whose commitment and dedication have made an impact on the lives of Kentuckians across the state. Most recently, she was given the distinction as one of Kentucky's Power Elite, a listing of individuals who have made a significant contribution on behalf of the Commonwealth. In her leadership role, she continually strives to provide statewide recognition for cities, public awareness for the many programs of the League and the NewCities Foundation, and expansion of her ongoing commitment to improve the quality of life for all Kentucky communities.

Ray Nelson was appointed as the Executive Director, Office for Security Coordination, by Governor Paul Patton in November 2001 following the horrific events of September 11, 2001. The Office for Security Coordination is responsible for the coordination of a comprehensive statewide security strategy, along with coordinating the executive branch's efforts to secure and protect personnel, assets, and facilities within the Commonwealth of Kentucky. Prior to his appointment, Mr. Nelson had concluded a distinguished military career as a combat veteran after serving in positions of increasing command responsibility from platoon through brigade level combat units. Colonel Nelson's military service included numerous assignments with U.S. Special Operations Forces as well as PeaceKeeping Operations in Eastern Europe. Several of these operations remain classified even today. Following his retirement, Colonel (retired) Nelson worked for TRW, Systems and Information Technology Group as a Balkans PeaceKeeping instructor and coach. Traveling to Bosnia and Kosovo, Mr. Nelson was able to coach, teach, and mentor senior Army leaders as they prepared for deployment to the Balkans. Mr. Nelson holds a Bachelors degree in Sociology from Iowa State University, a Masters in Business Administration from Webster University, and is a graduate of the United States Army Command and General Staff College and the United States Army War College.

Tom Preston diverse experiences in preventing and responding to aggressively defiant events against corporations, institutions, and individuals span 45 years. During a career of leadership roles in the business, governmental and professional sectors—including two active duty military tours also involving counterterrorism—his specialty has taken him throughout the US and into many foreign countries. From countering Soviet assassination teams in Turkey, to confronting bandits in Central America, to overcoming sabotage in this country, Preston brings a thick portfolio. He helped diffuse threats from terrorist sympathizers against former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher during a US visit. Interrupting a potential assassination attempt, he located and directed law enforcement to a terrorist organization in Brooklyn. He developed “PURGE,” the vulnerability assessment and countermeasure paradigm for prevention of and response to terrorism and workplace violence. Months before 9/11 his firm, Preston Global, warned on its web site against same-day, coordinated multiple attacks against the United States. Few believed. The University of Kentucky bestowed its first-ever Lifetime Achievement Award upon Tom Preston for his work in violent crisis and emergency management. A national magazine labeled one of his companies “among the 12 top strategic counseling firms in America.” He is active in the International Association of Counterterrorism Professionals, the National Association of Chiefs of Police, the American Society of Industrial Security and also is a member of the Kentucky Emergency Response Commission.

Dr. Michael Price is a research scientist at the University of Louisville Urban Studies Institute. Since 1981, as director of the Kentucky Population Research program, Dr. Price has served as the State Demographer representing the Commonwealth in U.S. Bureau of the Census federal-state cooperative programs and been responsible for the state’s official demographic forecast. Having obtained over $1.3 million in research grants and contracts, Dr. Price has studied a broad-range of state and local demographic issues including labor market analysis, residential transition, migration, job-population linkages, and small area forecasting. He is the lead author of the How Many Kentuckians population forecast series and is involved in child advocacy research as the data analyst for the annual Kentucky Kids Count data book. A native Louisvillian, Dr. Price received his bachelors and masters degrees from the University of Louisville before pursuing doctoral studies at Michigan State University. He is married, has a fourteen-year-old son, and enjoys windsurfing, tennis, and numerous wilderness activities.

Dr. James R. Ramsey currently serves as Acting President and Professor of Economics and Public Administration at the University of Louisville and is on loan from the University of Louisville to the Patton administration serving as the Governor’s Senior Policy Advisor and State Budget Director. Previously, Dr. Ramsey has served as Vice Chancellor for Finance and Administration and Professor of Public Administration at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill; Vice President for Finance and Administration and Professor of Economics at Western Kentucky University and as the state’s Chief Economist. Dr. Ramsey has teaching experience at the University of Kentucky, Kentucky State University, Middle Tennessee University, and Loyola University. Jim is a native of the Louisville area. Kevin O'Hara Shanley is a Senior Policy Analyst with the Homeland Security and Emergency Management Division of the National Governors Association. Mr. Shanley joined the National Governors Association in 2001 and has since been assigned exclusively to homeland security issues. Mr. Shanley has accumulated a wide range of experience in public safety including careers in municipal law enforcement and state and county emergency management. After retiring as a police officer from the Stratford (CT) Police Department and receiving a Master's Degree in Criminal Justice from John Jay in New York City in 1980, he served as a legislative analyst with the Florida House and Senate Criminal Justice Committees. He later served on criminal justice committees for Governors Bob Graham of Florida and Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts. Mr. Shanley later became the Director of Planning and Research for the Tampa Police Department in 1990 and remained in that position until moving to the Florida Division of Emergency Management in 1996. His positions with the Florida agency included Area Coordinator, Manager of the Compliance Planning Support Bureau (State Emergency Response Commission), and Chief Planner during Emergency Operations Center (EOC) activations.

Molly Stauffer has been with the National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL) for six years and serves as staff to NCSL's Task Force on Protecting Democracy. Ms. Stauffer played a key role in the development of the task force's July 2002 interim report that includes both federal recommendations and guidance to state legislatures on a host of homeland security issues. Ms. Stauffer will continue to work with Governor Ridge's staff and Congress as efforts move forward to implement the National Strategy for Homeland Security. Ms. Stauffer is also the director of NCSL's environment committee. The committee leads NCSL's activities before Congress and the administration on a host of environmental issues. Although Ms. Stauffer's work for the committee and the task force focuses significantly on the Federal-state relationship, Ms. Stauffer's first three years at NCSL focused on tracking state activity on a host of health-related issues. She authored numerous publications. Prior to joining NCSL, Ms. Stauffer developed, administered and analyzed national surveys on health-related issues at the Intergovernmental Health Policy Project at the George Washington University also in Washington, DC. Ms. Stauffer holds a master's degree in public health from the George Washington University School of Medicine and Health Sciences and is a Certified Environmental Manager. Ms. Stauffer is also a former teaching assistant at the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Maryland.

Dr. Clifford Tsuboi is currently serving as a visiting professor to the Patterson School. He is a holder of two B.S. Degrees from Oregon State University in Physical Science (1971) and Pharmacy (1978). In 1989 he received a PharmD degree in Clinical Pharmacy Practice from the University of Kentucky. Following three years of postdoctoral work in the field of hematology/oncology at UK's Lucille Parker Markey Cancer Center, he established a teaching/consulting relationship with the Patterson School, which released a 1999 report on how prepared Kentucky was for a terrorist attack. Dr. Tsuboi, a retired lieutenant colonel in the U.S. Army Reserve, specializes in biogenetic warfare and bioterrorism. Following the report's release, Dr. Tsuboi, along with Robert Pringle and several Patterson School students, began an ambitious project to meet with government officials in all 120 Kentucky counties to discuss potential terrorist threats. In this outreach project Dr. Tsuboi focused on the state's public health emergency preparedness, contacting public health officials in counties and districts all over Kentucky to assess the capabilities of local public health centers to respond to biological, chemical, and radiological emergencies. This assessment comes in the form of a 57-page questionnaire from the Centers of Disease Control in Washington, D.C., which is sponsoring this nationwide study. So far eight states have completed their assessment, Kentucky included. Eventually all this information will be entered into the Department of Justice database, to try to develop a clear overall picture of what will be necessary to address problems throughout the U.S.

Aldona Valicenti was appointed by Governor Paul E. Patton in December of 1997 as the first Chief Information Officer (CIO) for the Commonwealth of Kentucky and a member of his Executive Cabinet. During her tenure she has established the CIO position through legislation and has undertaken a transformation of how information technology services are delivered in state government. The Governor's EMPOWER Kentucky initiative identified information technology as a key enabler. Recently, Ms. Valicenti was instrumental in forming the Governor's Office for Technology, which brought several separate agencies into a cohesive organizational structure. The Executive Order for this reorganization was ratified by the 2000 General Assembly. Ms. Valicenti has a BS in both Math and Chemistry and an MS degree in Organic Chemistry and began her career with the Dow Corning Corporation. In 1976 she joined the Amoco Corporation and for the next 21 years held positions of increasing responsibility including Manager-System Development and Support, Divisional CIO for the Amoco Chemical Company, and Manager-Customer Solutions, Information Technology Shared Services, an internal supplier of information technology services to the global Amoco Corporation. In this position she was responsible for contracting for all information technology services for the Amoco Corporation. Ms. Valicenti has served as Regional Director, Vice President and Program Chair and President of the National Association of State Chief Information Officers (NASCIO). She also worked with the National Governor's Association (NGA) e-Government Task Force, which Governor Paul Patton co-chaired for several years, and serves as his policy advisor on information technology issues. Ms. Valicenti is a member and leader of various national, state and local organizations: Past President, NASCIO, Representing Chief Information Officers of the States, Board of Directors, Women Executives in State Government (WESG) Kentucky Criminal Justice Council, Chair, Unified Criminal Justice Information Systems Committee, E-Governance Task Force, National Governor's Association, Information Technology Advisory Council, Executive Council on Information Management and Technology (ECIMT), United States General Accounting Office (GAO), Intergovernmental Technology Conference (ITC), Public Safety Wireless Network, Executive Committee, Geographic Information Systems Advisory Council, Telehealth Board Member, City of Louisville, Mayor's Information Technology Strategy Council, University of Louisville's Industrial Board of Advisors, Computer Engineering & Science, Distance Learning Advisory Council, Postsecondary Education Technology Advisory Committee.
